

NOTICE TO THE PROFESSIONS

UBC's IPC On the Run

The College of Speech and Hearing Health Professionals of British Columbia (the "College") has a standard of practice for Inter-professional Collaborative Practice (SOP-PROF-01). A new UBC online learning opportunity from the College of Health Disciplines -- Inter-Professional Collaboration \(IPC\) On the Run -- has been approved by the College Board to support this standard.

UBC's IPC On the Run series consists of 6 online learning modules that are easily accessible and qualify for Continuing Competency Credits (CCCs) -- see Category A, Continuing Competency Credit Program Requirements (POL-QA-02)

The IPC On the Run modules are open access, interactive, self-directed, 100% online, and provide overviews of concepts and principles related to inter-professional collaborative practice, as well as a foundation for further learning, for both pre-licensure and practicing professionals.

In addition to an Introductory module, there are 6 additional modules available, including:

1. Inter-professional Communication presents this foundational competency for collaborative practice and patient-centered care.
2. Patient-Client-Family-Community-Centered Care demonstrates how patient-centered care is more effective when delivered by an inter-professional team and that patients and families need to be integrated into the team to set and achieve their goals.
3. Role Clarification helps learners explore who to collaborate with; in what situations; when; in what contexts; where, how, and why.
4. Team Functioning focuses on how different groups need to work together differently based on who they work with; what their patient's needs are; and where they work.
5. Inter-professional Conflict Management stresses the unique characteristics of inter-professional conflict that when managed effectively can lead to better outcomes.
6. Collaborative Leadership provides tools and strategies to ensure each member is prepared to take on a leadership role when their skills and knowledge are paramount.
